The Way of Korean Viewing Stone Appreciation: Suseok

Suseok, Korean viewing stones, has a rich and well-documented history, and is an integral part of the ancient Asian art of viewing stone appreciation. Despite this, Korean practices are largely unknown or poorly known to scholars, stone collectors, and art connoisseurs in Western countries.

We will explore the world of Korean viewing stones, or suseok—how they compare with Japanese suiseki and Chinese scholar’s rocks, their unique history and development from the 15th century to modern times, aesthetics, display techniques, and how collectors today can find and appreciate them.

We have been gathering information for over a year, translating books and articles, consulting with the Korean Suseok Association and private collectors in Korea and North America, and even traveling to Korea, to produce this program. We believe it is the most comprehensive program in English on Korean viewing stone appreciation.

The same program will be broadcast twice, once on Saturday evening and again the next morning.
